One Thing That Is Not To Be Missed In Medellín Is Christmas. The Whole City Is Decorated With Amazing Lights Which Is Definitely A Sight For The Travelers.

4. History

It is said that Spaniards first arrived in around the 1540s, however Medellín was discovered in the year 1616 by Francisco Herrera y Campuzano, who settled with his troops at Poblado de San Lorenzo which is popularly known as El Poblado today. As the city started to develop, Spanish and Jews started to settle in the city. However, the condition of the city was poor as there was no source of income in the initial stage, but soon gold mines were discovered and then started the development of Medellín. In the 16th century new buildings and churches were made by the traders and foreigners and Medellín had around the population of 3000 people. 17th century saw more development and the city was flourishing with traders and new settlers started to come in. Medellín became independent in the 18th century and the most prominent and prestigious university of Colombia was founded in the year 1803. In the year 1826, Medellín was named the capital of the Antioquia department, however the 90s saw the city's rapid growth and Medellín became the first Colombian city to participate in the industrial revolution, although 90s wasn't the most brightest for the city, since Medellín became 'the drug capital' under the influence of the most notorious criminals 'Pablo Escobar' during which the city was known for its crime and violence. It all ended in the year 1993 with Pablo's death and the city slowly started reviving its lost glory. 20th century saw the city redefining itself and indulging into modern art, thus giving birth to theatres, and many art centers. The industry sector boomed with new industries and the introduction of the metro made Medellín the only city in Colombia to have this quick transportation system. Today, Medellín stands as one of the most peaceful cities in all of Colombia, and has been named the most innovative city in the past. The city has been ever developing and growing in the industrial and textile sector making Medellín the second largest city of Colombia.

5. Cultural identity

The people of Colombia are as lively as its countless landscapes. The country's descendants majorly come from three ethnic groups – Africans, Indians and European settlers. The rich culture of Colombia is as eccentric and as varied as these ethnic groups, whose traditional art, cuisines and ceremonies highlights the country to its travellers, making Colombia one the tourist's favourite, today. The people of Medellín are referred to as Paisas, a name that is suggested to have come from the people who grew coffees. The Paisa culture is traditionally Catholic, hardworking, hospitable and comes from a Spanish background. Although there are other cultures present in the city, Medellín is highly dominated by the Paisa Culture. Paisa culture is traditionally seen through the artwork, handicrafts and the museums. The city is home to many exhibitions and festivals which attract a lot of tourists due to its ethnicity and representation of the multi-lingual cultures that exist in the city. Medellín is religiously dominated by Catholics, which shows in its several religious activities and Churches of the city, one will find prominent artwork of the greatest regional and international artists on the streets.
