4. History

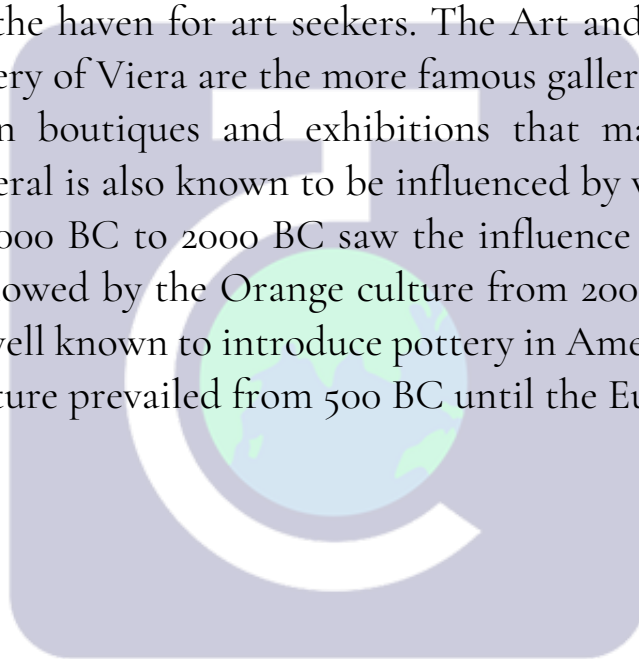

Cape Canaveral was originally called Cape Kennedy from 1963 to 1973. Initially the area to the south of Cape Canaveral was occupied by Ais people and the area to the north was occupied by the Surruque people. Although Cape Canaveral was noted on the map in the early 16th century, it was not named. It was first named by Spanish explorers as Cabo Canareal in the first half of the 16th Century. In fact the name Canaveral is the third oldest surviving European place name in the US. Another early name was Cape of Currents. Around 1564, the name started appearing on maps. Due to the hazards posed by the cape to passing boats, the first Cape Canaveral lighthouse was built in January 1848. Once the lighthouse was established a few small families started moving into the area and thus a stable settlement was formed. Port Canaveral started being used for military and commercial purposes only around July 1950. Cape Canaveral is also known for being the test site for missiles. The first rocket to be launched was a V-2 rocket named Bumper 8.

The Art and Antique Studio and Gallery and Art Gallery of Viera are the more famous galleries. However you will also find small town boutiques and exhibitions that make the place worth visiting. Cape Canaveral is also known to be influenced by various other cultures during the BC era. 5000 BC to 2000 BC saw the influence of the Mount Taylor culture. This was followed by the Orange culture from 2000 BC to 500 BC. The Orange culture was well known to introduce pottery in America. Post the Orange culture, St. Johns culture prevailed from 500 BC until the Europeans came in.

The KSC boundary has various habitats such as coastal dunes, salt water estuaries and marshes, fresh water impoundments, scrub, pine Flatwoods and hardwood hammocks. More than 1500 species of plants and animals take refuge in these habitats. Of these species, there are about 33 animals that are state listed as threatened, endangered or species of special concern.
