1. Geographical location

The national capital of the country of China, Beijing is located at the country's northern tip. It is at the intersection of Yanshan and Xishan mountain ranges. The city is located from Bohai Sea at a distance of 150 km inland. Beijing is situated at an elevation of 66 feet to 200 feet that is extended towards south and east.

Index2. Neighbouring cities/countries

The City Of Beijing Covers Around 16,800 Square Kilometres. Hebei Province Surrounds The City. However, The Tianjin Municipality Stretches Across The Southeast Of Beijing. The Yan Mountains Form The Northeast Border Whereas The Western Part Is Occupied With Jundu Mountains . These Together Form Lowland That Is Famously Known As The Bay Of Beijing.

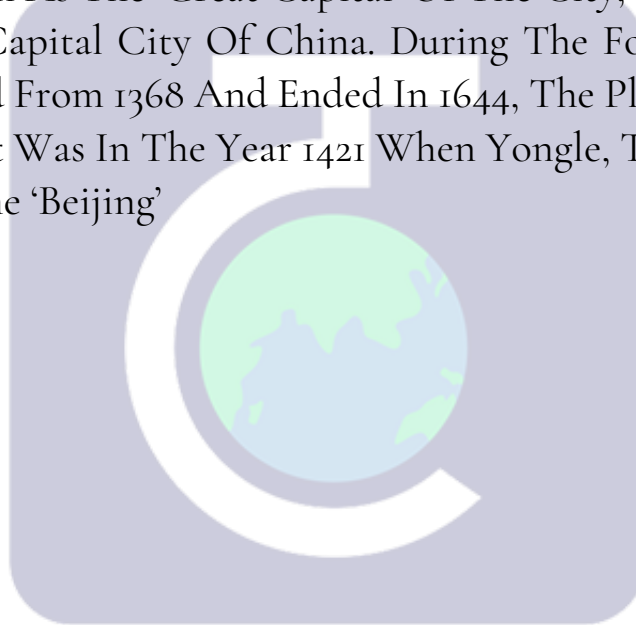

3. Significance

Although Most Of The Character Of The City Was Demolished In The Year 1949 To Industrialize And Modernize The City Of Beijing Completely, There Still Exist Few Parts That Denote Its Old Picturesque. With Various Old Buildings, Monumental Structures And Remains Of Chinese Art Decides To Become The Core And An Integral Part Of The City. The New Commercial Reforms Along With The New Formed Roads Have Brought A Colourful Look To The City. However, Beijing's Older Form Can Still Be Found In The Neighbouring Areas. From The Small Pot Gardens Along With Stoves That Burn Coal To Cook Food To Stone Lions Beautifully Carved On The Gates Are Still Profound In The City That Keeps The Significance Of The Place Intact.

4. History

The History Of The City Of Beijing Leads Us Back To The Home Erectus Era That Dates To Around 500,000 Years Before The Current Age. The Most Primitive Settlement That Is Known To Be The Southern Beijing Now Is Recorded To Approximately 1045 B. C. Genghis Khan Ruled The Current City From 1162 To The Year 1227. He Was The Conqueror Who Established 'Dadu' Which Is Also Known As The 'Great Capital' Of The City; Ever Since Dadu Was Known To Be The Capital City Of China. During The Former Years Of Ming Dynasty That Started From 1368 And Ended In 1644, The Place Was Renamed As 'Beiping'. However, It Was In The Year 1421 When Yongle, The Third Ming Ruler Established The Name 'Beijing'

5. Cultural identity

Beijing is presumed to undergo a range of political conventions throughout its journey as one of the prominent cities of China. However, it tried holding to its cultural eminence. When the city was elected as the capital of the country in the year 1949, the political importance added much grace to its account. Indeed, there are not many cities that have seen tremendous growth in population as well as industrialization as Beijing experienced. The urban trend and the historic culture of the city have boosted the city to have corporate travellers and foreign tourists visiting the city to relish its identity.

6. Natural resources

There are five rivers that flow from the city of Beijing which includes the Beiyun River and the Chaobai River to the east, and the Juma River and the Yongding River to its west. The northwest mountainous regions are the source for most of the rivers flowing through the city. Apart from this, iron ores and coal are profoundly found throughout the city. Moreover, there are also reserves of marble and granite.
