3. Significance

Located at the end of a bay protected by the Sierra Blanca is Costa Del Sol's glamorous resort town, Marbella. Bustling with stunning beaches, endless touristy venues and high upscale resorts, the town is truly a getaway from the 9-5 hustle bustle of the city life. Popular among the world celebrities, this resort town hints of its past in its palatial town hall, antiquated Moorish dividers and medieval remains. The old town is equally a popular destination and is known for its cobbled narrow streets backed by flower-filled squares; bustling with art galleries, numerous shops and excellent art galleries. This popular and renowned location among the famous celebrities and wealthy only boasts a metropolitan vibe and a very intriguing history along the excellent Mediterranean Sea. The chic town is undoubtedly the most expensive city in Costa del Sol, maybe due to its high-end restaurants, impressive golf courses, luxury hotels, vibrant clubs and opulent marina. Marbella has had an affair with Visigoths, Phoenicians and Roman; all three leaving their stamp in the different architecture of the town. However, in spite of the development, the town has retained its pleasant old quarter, which is brimming with conventional Andalucian charm.

4. History

Marbella's history started in around 1600 BC when it was vanquished by the Romans who named the city Salduba, which implies Salt City. Be that as it may, researchers have discovered remains that the region has been possessed since the Paleolithic and Phoenician times. From that point onward, Marbella played host to a few developments that settled in the range, especially in the area of the Rio Real – the Phoenicians, the Visigoths, Vandals and Byzantines. Every one of these gatherings left their stamp in Marbella by method for the numerous recorded structures – or their remaining parts. In the 6th century, Southern Spain was conquered by the Arabs who brought with them Islam and further changed the name of the town to Marbil-la. A fortification and a barrier divider was worked with just three get to focuses to shield them from Christian assaults. As a matter of fact, it was the Moors which left the biggest stamp. It is amid their time that Marbella (or Marbiliya around then) turned into a walled city. The Moors manufactured the Al Kasbah (Alcazaba), a walled city with a palace and a channel. It was just in 1485 that Marbella turned out to be a piece of Spanish domain. This was the point at which the Catholic Kings guaranteed Marbella for Spain. In the nineteenth century Marbella began to develop all the more quickly, extending past the memorable old town. Public building works of the time included new extensions and streets. Also it was then, when new ventures and industries arrived. In any case, it was not until the mid-1940s that voyagers began to come here in huge numbers, after business visionaries like Prince Alfonso de Hohenlohe started the development of lodgings and flat edifices. Thus, rejuvenation of the city started to happen. Interest in the range is solid today and tourism is energized.

5. Cultural identity

The culture of the country is majorly determined by Ancient Rome alongside with the Iberian and the pre-Roman Celtic culture. Other cultures that have deeply affected the way of life in the country includes the Moors and the Phoenicians. Spanish culture is primarily known for the world-famous Flamenco music and dance, pristine beaches and out-of-the-world architecture that features everything from pre-historic monuments, Roman ruins to Gothic Cathedrals, Castles and much more. One thing that remains inevitable to the culture of Spain is Bullfighting. Except from bullfighting in the country, the bull remains an important aspect of plenty of extremely weird and exciting festivals in Spain that are crucial to Spanish culture. The country is also home to some of the most stunning artists and its cities are some of Europe's major destinations for art enthusiasts. However, the Spanish fiesta is about more than bulls as each city, town and village in the nation has its own particular celebration in which the entire populace gets included in some frame. The music of the country is highly dominated by Latin American music, however Spanish music is also associated with traditional styles such as flamenco and classical guitar. Although Andalusia is very much known for flamenco music, gaita rociera (tabor pipe) music adds to the music scene. Besides the traditional Andalusian cultural events, a wide range of events are held in the city, majorly between June and October. There are numerous festivals devoted to music, film, theatre and arts that depict the true culture of the country.
