1. Geographical location

Bern, also written as Berne is the de facto capital of Switzerland and belongs to the canton of Bern. The federal city is situated on the Swiss plateau in the Bern canton and finds itself surrounded by the two mountains; Gurten and Bantiger. The capital city was earlier built on a high elevated peninsula enclosed by the river of Aare.

Bern Finds Itself Located 113kms Away From Lucerne, Followed By Zurich At 124kms, 166kms To Freilburg, Strasbourg At 234kms, 318kms To Turn And 354kms To Milan. Neighbouring Countries Include Italy, Austria, Germany, France And Liechtenstein.

3. Significance

The medieval town: The 4th populated city in the country is incidentally the federal capital of Switzerland and lies on a crook in Aare river, it's a town where history booms. Declared a World Heritage Site in 1983 by the United Nations, Bern will transport you to the 12th century with its medieval architecture and cobblestone streets. The name "Bern" comes from the time when the city's founder murdered a bear on the Aare landmass, and there have been bear pits in the city ever since. High-state bridges interface the city with the high ground on the correct bank and with the more recent parts of the city. Houses and shops, with their road level arcades and anticipating rooftops, mirror the flourishing of the natives of Bern in the seventeenth and eighteenth century. Bern is rich in culture with year-round occasions, for example, the Summer and Winter Jazz Festivals; the Buskers Festival; and the Gurten festival, held in mid-July. Back ashore, you will bump into excellent eateries, bars and wine basements that are as unique as the city's fantastic exhibition halls, which go from the grand Bern Historical Museum to the curious Einsteinhaus. The modern blends amicably with the old in this beguiling city, and in the recent years, the natives have prudently included contemporary-style homes and architecture to the historic atmosphere. Another distinctive peculiarity of Bern is its fountains; the city is home to more than 100 fountains. Each recounts an anecdote about heroes and events in the city's past. The most grim – and therefore the most well known – is the Kindlifresserbrunnen located on Kornhausplatz. Bern even has its own particular mountain, the Gurten, prominent with local people and guests during the summer time due to its broad perspectives, smaller than expected railroad and perception tower. Opening doors to various excursions, the provincial town is charming, glorious and mesmerizing!

4. History

The first confirmation of human settlements in the Aare valley goes back to the Neolithic time frame. In any case, the soonest known settlement in the region of the city of Bern was on the Engehalbinsel toward the north of the later city. This late La Tène culture settlement was established around 300 to 200 BCE and braced in the second century BCE. After the Roman triumph, a little Gallo-Roman settlement, a vicus, was re-established at a similar place. However even after the Roman Empire fell, there were scattered settlements all over the region. The historical past of the city begins back in the late 12th century, when Berthold V, Duke of Zähringen established the city. Around then, a lot of today's Switzerland (then considered some portion of southern Burgundy) was under the expert of the place of Zähringen. Amid the second half of the twelfth century, Berchtold V of Zähringen constructed a little stronghold at Nydegg on the eastern piece of the promontory to protect the Aare. Regardless of whether there was at that point a settlement there when the stronghold was manufactured or if the town was first established close to the palace in 1191 by Berthold V and the degree of the primary town are altogether bantered about. The bear highlighted on the present city emblem initially showed up in 1224. As per legend, the city was named after the primary creature executed by the Duke while chasing amid the development of the city. In the 13th century, Bern was extended towards the west, and the Prison Tower framed the new principle entryway. In the 14th century, the 3rd and last development period of the city occurred up to the present fundamental railroad station. Bern attacked and vanquished Aargau in 1415 and Vaud in 1536, and in addition other littler domains, along these lines turning into the biggest city-state north of the Alps. In 1405 Bern endured an overwhelming misfortune when a large portion of the city was burnt to the ground. This is the reason the first medieval cityscape has remained to a great extent in place up to the present day. In 1528, supporters of Zwingli presented the Reformation in Bern. In 1798, French troops walked in, setting off the decrease of the old city. Bern was further transformed into a university city in the year 1834 and it was in 1834 that it became the Federal capital of the country.

5. Cultural identity

Culture of Switzerland is heavily influenced by different European cultures. The main cultures influencing the way of life includes; French, German and Italian, therefore reflecting the diversity in all ways of life. The Alps have also played an essential role in moulding the culture of the country. The mountain regions of the country is known for its mountaineering and skiing culture that is further embedded with arts such as yodeling, alphorn and much more. Other various cultural icons that define the country feature Cowbell, the Swiss Army Knife, Swiss chocolates and cheese and Watches. Folk art has been an integral part of Switzerland for decades now and till date can be found all over the country. Folk art is showcased through various forms of art that includes, dance, poetry, wood carving, embroidery and music. One will also bump into plenty of local and regional rites that take place throughout the year. Folk music may vary between the different regions. The capital city is a hub of libraries, museums and music. The cultural center, Bern is home to some of the nation's leading architecture and galleries that takes one through the everyday life. The city also hosts various festivals like BeJazz Summer and Winter Festival, Buskers' festival Gurtenfestival, Internationales Jazzfestival Bern and Taktlos-Festival along with fairs like Bernese Fasnacht (Carnival) and Zibelemärit.
