1. Geographical location

Santiago, the capital of Chile, is one of the largest cities in South America and Chile's center of commerce. The city lies in the center of the Santiago Basin and the mountains surrounds fertile lands. It is situated at an elevation of 1,700 feet (520 m) in the country's central valley and is the nation's capital city. The city rests on an inland plain between the Andes Mountains in the east and the Coastal Range in the west; it is 100 km from the Pacific Ocean and 40 km from the Andes range. The city, which boasts of some of Latin America's most spectacular infrastructure enfolds in the lush green fields and trees, making Santiago a metropolis in paradise.

3. Significance

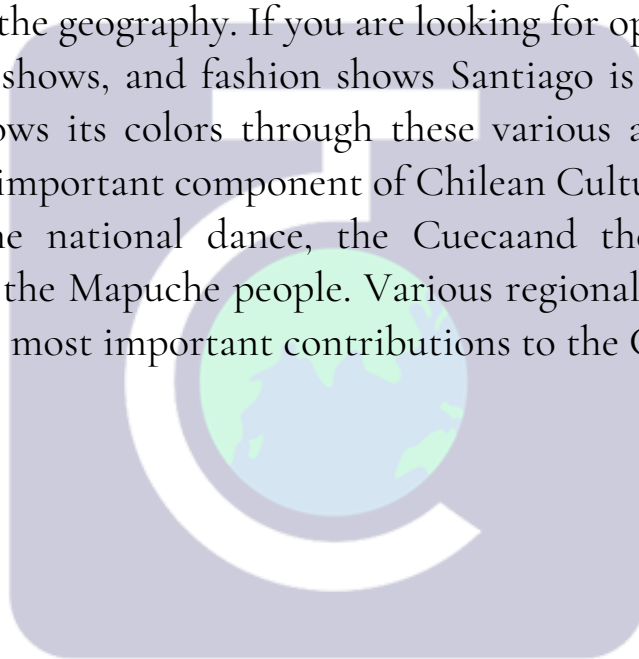

Chile is one of the most breath-taking locations in the world. As people say ‘it is a land of contrasts that invites you to live the pleasure of emotion’. One such location in this country is Santiago, Santiago vaunts to be one of the most alluring backdrops of any capital city on earth. The city itself is a quickly expanding metropolis of about seven million people and is a cultural, economic and educational hub. The city is divided into 32 municipalities out of which some are very prosperous, while some are very poor. Santiago is home to several arts and performance spaces including the Universidad de Chile Theater, Municipal Theater, and the Gabriela Mistral Cultural Center. But what makes this city today so lively are the parks, plazas, fountains and some of the country’s finest neo-baroque architecture, glass towers are an eye candy. The city is home to street performers, who will be seen in almost every street sharing space with you, making you move to their tunes. The city is bursting out with restaurants that serve almost all the cuisines, leaving for you to desire for more. The café’s in the city are one of the bests and the street-side food is to die for. The city, which is bisected by the Rio Mapocho, forces you to dip into its vibrant culture, artistic museums and lavish nightlife. At present, Santiago is the most important cultural, administrative and financial center and city in Chile.

4. History

Santiago was founded by Spanish conqueror Pedro de Valdivia in the year 1541. Back then what was called Santiago del Nuevo Extremo, was a settlement of just 200 houses. It wasn't until the end of the 18th century that Santiago began to obtain the substructure of a proper city. Santiago started to look like a real capital during the 18th century, as trade restrictions were relieved, more wealth was being made and the population was on a high. However, it wasn't until after the independence in the year 1818 that development really got going, as the state established beautiful public buildings. As the city entered the 20th century it began to push the new barrio alto into the east and Bellavista into the North. The horizontal spread since then has gone well past its limits bolting up outlying towns and villages at a great speed; The central zones have been shot up vertically, too, chiefly in Providencia and Las Condes, where the eye-catching high-rise buildings show the country's fast economic growth over the past decade. By the 19th century, new projects were built and the railways expanded, which further led to the increase in population due to migrants settling in the region. But the country still faced economic crisis due to large number of inhabitants. After the economic crisis, the city experienced quicker growth in the financial and services sector which further led to building of new architectural and infrastructural projects in the 1960s. A real estate boom began in the 1990s, with the construction of large numbers of shopping centers in the country's main municipalities, and a modern network of urban highways has also been built. Corporate buildings have gone up in the eastern part of the city, housing important companies and international corporations. Despite this dramatic transformation, however, the city's central core still sticks to the same street pattern marked out by Pedro de Valdivia in 1541, and its first public space, the Plaza de Armas, is still at the heart of its street life.

5. Cultural identity

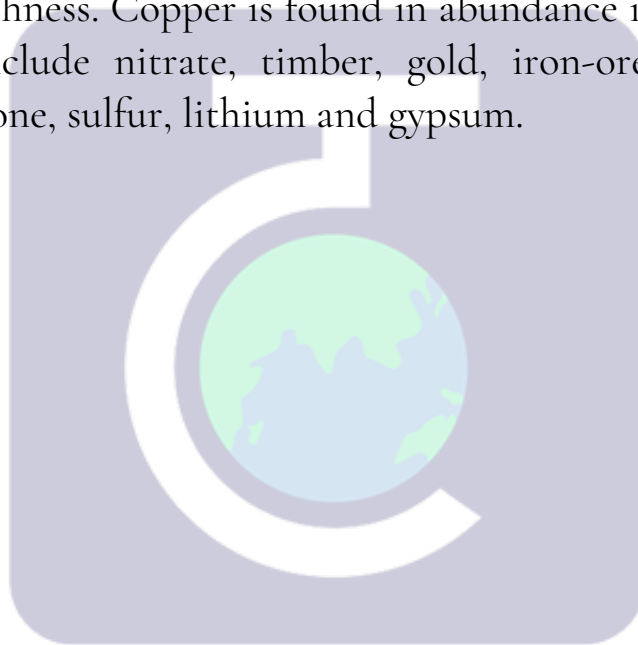

The culture is an interesting mix of home-grown and Spanish influences. Due to this unification of cultures, Santiago has a fascinating mix of ethnicities and a moderately heterogeneous society. The Capital of Chile, Santiago is the economic and cultural center for this country. Chilean people are very fanatical about soccer and rodeo is also a very popular pastime. Chilean customs and activities are deeply related to the geography. If you are looking for opera, premium-priced art galleries, theater shows, and fashion shows Santiago is the place to be. The vivacious culture shows its colors through these various art forms. Music and dance are also a very important component of Chilean Cultural identity, which is depicted through the national dance, the Cueca and the unforgettable pre-Columbian music of the Mapuche people. Various regional folk music styles are counted as one of the most important contributions to the Chilean culture.

6. Natural resources

A home to thousands of animals in the National zoo of Chile, Santiago also consists of a Botanical Garden which is located in the Santiago Metropolitan Park. The Botanical Garden contains various native plants, and also works towards the betterment through its research and development. Natural reserves in Santiago, Chile, fill the need to protect the various areas that display an admirable natural richness. Copper is found in abundance in Chile. Other major natural resources include nitrate, timber, gold, iron-ore, silver, manganese, molybdenum, limestone, sulfur, lithium and gypsum.

7.1.7. Concha y Toro Winery

Visit the legendary Concha y Toro Winery of central Chile, touring the vineyard, visiting the aging cellar, and partaking in a sublime wine tasting. Cheers to that! An interesting tour awaits us covering the company history while walking through the extensive vineyards. We visit the famous wine cellar, home to many legends including the Casillero del Diablo mystery and then we enjoy a tasting session from a special collection of wines including Don Melchor - voted one of the best Chilean wines for the last 15 years. There's time to visit the wine bar on our own and meander through the gift shop admiring (and maybe purchasing from) the vast selection of wines. We are driven back to our hotel in Santiago from the vineyard. There is the option of going for lunch in the picturesque Tesoros de Chile restaurant close to the winery, where you go on a delicious 'journey' through all of Chile as you taste different dishes from the country's different regions. One of the world's three leading wine producers and South America's single largest exporter of fine wines, Concha y Toro accounts for virtually a quarter of Chile's total wine production. Founded in 1883, Concha y Toro was the first producer to introduce Chilean fine wines made from French grape varieties. Today, Concha y Toro spans over a dozen estates located throughout the premier wine regions of Chile.
