4. History

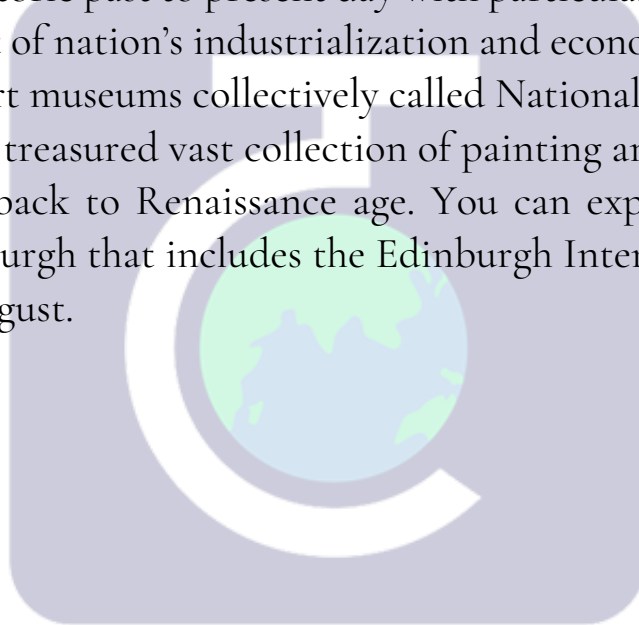

Edinburgh has a very unusual and interesting past and the place is shrouded in mystery. The history of the places is more than thousands of year old and is vastly displayed in the well preserved monuments and materials belonging to various stages of its evolution. However, the city became an important centre during middle ages when hill fort was established in the surrounding region. At this time, Edinburgh was under the rule of Kingdom of Northumbria and served as royal home for Kings of Scotland from 7th to 12th century. It later also became the capital of Scotland. The New Town area in Edinburgh was built and developed in 18th century which became a symbol of wealth and glory and occupied by rich merchants and nobles of the time. Until 19th century it remained the largest and the most important city of Scotland but was later overshadowed by Glasgow.
