1. Geographical location

Rome is located in the Lazio region, which is in the central-western part of the Italian Peninsula. Its position lies along the shore of the river Tiber. When the civilization began, the first settlement originally developed on the hills that were facing a ford beside the Island of Tiber. This was and still is the only natural ford of the river, that too in this area. Spread across (about) 1285 sq. km or 496.3 sq. mi. of land, it is the largest commune in the European Union. The topography of the city suggests that the land is at an elevation of about 21 meters, which is exactly 69 feet.

3. Significance

Rome Had Been The Center Of The Most Powerful And Huge Empire That Had Lasted A Long Time. Even At The Point When The Roman Empire Began To Crumble, It Took A Long Time To Fall Completely. Its Significance Lies In Its Civilization, Which Was Not Only The Biggest Power In The World But Also Thrived In Improving Human Society As A Whole. The Entire Empire Took The First Step Towards The Development Of European Culture And Custom. After The Fall Of The Roman Empire, A Huge Power Vacuum Was Left On The Face Of This World, Which The Church Moved Into And Got Its Position Solidified. Rome Has A Very Distinctive And Bold Mark On World History, And It Has Been The Center Of An Empire Whose Impact Has Been Felt Across The World's Culture And Civilization.

4. History

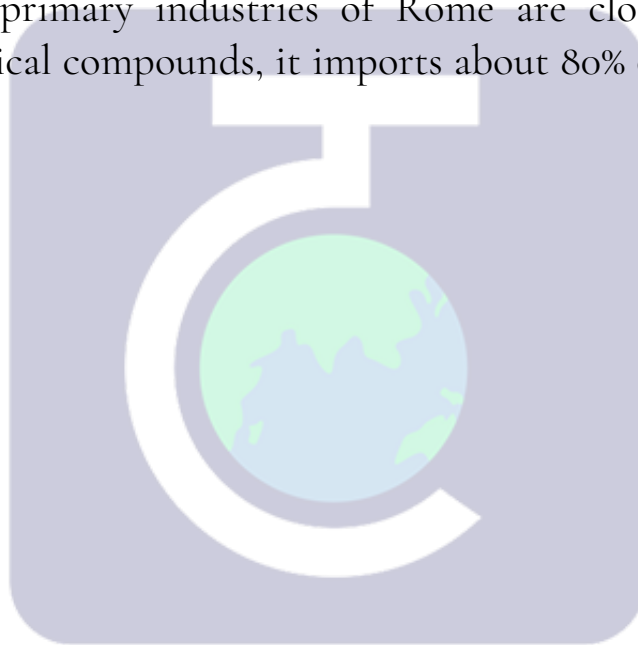

According To Legend, At First, Rome Was The Center Of The Roman Republic, And Then Eventually Became The Center Of The Entire Roman Empire. It Was Founded By Remus And Romulus In Around 753 BC By The Banks Of The River Tiber. In The Fourth Century, It Further Became The Capital Of The Christian World. And, It Is At This Time That The Christian City Was Constructed On Top Of The Ancient City, Reutilizing Buildings, Materials, And Spaces. Since Its Foundation, Rome Had Been Linked With The History Of Mankind And Humanity In An Unending Manner. Early Rome Used To Be Governed And Run By Kings, It Is Only After The Passing Away Of Seven Kings That The Citizens Of Rome Took Power Over The City And Ruled Themselves. Eventually, They Had A Council Called The Senate, Which Governed The Citizens And The City. From This Point On, It Became The Roman Republic. Previously, The Senate Acted As An Advisory For The King, But Now, It Chooses A Consul. It Is The Counsel Who Then Ruled As A King, But Only For The Duration Of A Year. In The Roman Republic, There Existed Four Classes Amongst The People. In The Eyes Of The Romans, The Relevance And Significance Of The Class Were Highly Regarded. The People Of The Highest Class Of Rome Were The Nobles. They Were Called By The Name “patricians”. They Were The Most Powerful People In The City Of Rome. Second To Them Came The “equestrians”, Or Sometimes, As They Were Called, “knights”. The Third Were The “plebeians”, Who Were The Last Of The Freeman. After Them, It Was The Lowest Class Comprising Of Slaves. The Slaves Had No Rights And Were Owned By Other People Called Masters. The Greatest Challenge That Rome Ever Faced Was That Of The Carthaginians. Their Empire Was Somewhat Similar To That Of Rome. The War Between Rome And Carthage Took Place Both On Lands And Sea. The Roman Empire, In The End, Ran Through Decadence By Millions Of Barbarians From The East And North Of Europe, Who Savaged The City And Ran It To The Grounds. The Two Or Three Times That The Great Migration Took Place In Europe Proved Really Bad For The City Of Rome. This Period Marked The “Fall Of Rome”, But Excluded The Eastern Empire.

5. Cultural identity

The culture of the city of Rome has been appraised by millions since the ancient days. The city is advent for its lifestyle, politics, religion, arts, cuisine, fashion, and architecture, and all these form the highly appreciated culture of Rome. Talking about architecture, there were numerous styles and concepts that were not only adopted by Rome but also created. Its inception began in the ancient times, with the biggest contribution of Romans; the Colosseum [41.89021 | 12.492231]. Then the medieval period followed, which also saw the rise of new designs and genres of construction and decoration. After this, the Renaissance and Baroque brought huge changes in the Empire, especially in its architecture. It was then followed by more changes with the birth of Neoclassicism and then further into Fascist architecture. The elements of architectural change and evolution in Rome can be seen in its villas and gardens, museums and galleries, and especially the Vatican City. A huge portion of the Roman culture lies in its performing arts and entertainment followed by its cuisine, which has an impact all over the world and involves few of the most appreciated dishes around the globe. A couple of other highlights of Rome's culture are cut with its involvement in sports. Rome has a very keen eye for Football, also known as soccer, and Tennis. Other than that, a lot of other sports are also highly popular in the city such as Cycling, Volleyball, Handball, among others. Speaking of culture, festivals are an integral aspect of Rome. Since ancient times, Romans were known as perennial fun and frolic seekers. During important holidays, especially the religious ones, the entire city shuts down. There is a specially line-up of festivals, including independent small-scale festivals and big budgeted citywide events. These make use of the city's endless extent of photogenic places and venues.

Index6. Natural resources

Rome doesn't have a lot of natural resources other than open green spaces. The few minerals or metals it has are mercury, bauxite, natural gas, pyrite, sulfur, petroleum and zinc. Other resources include potash, pumice, feldspar and marble. As the terrain of Rome is mostly mountainous, it isn't the best place for farming. Only a mere 26.41 percent of the entire land of Rome is appropriate for agriculture. As the primary industries of Rome are clothing, tourism, food processing and chemical compounds, it imports about 80% of its needed product for domestic market.
