1. Geographical location

Mexico City is situated near to the southern end of the Anahuac plateau. This is the valley of Mexico, which is sometimes mentioned as the Basin of Mexico. It is at an altitude of c. 7,800 ft. above the sea level. Mountain barriers obscure the horizons of the city, and the peaks of Iztaccihuatl and Popocatepetl are not far off. Lake Texcoco got drained beginning from the 1600s, and that is what Mexico City rests on primarily. Since the 20th century, the city has gone down by 9 meters in some areas.
