3.1.1. Punakha Dzong

Respect the expound traditional design at Punakha Dzong, Bhutan's second biggest dzong. Today, the locale's regulatory center and the fortification complex dates from 1638 and houses numerous hallowed artefacts that accommodate the Kagyu School of Tibetan Buddhism's Drukpa ancestry. The 6-storey structure remains at a height of 1,200 meters close to the intersection of 2 streams, encompassed by peaceful mountains and woodlands. Examine the resplendent interiors, which incorporate many religious pictures, imaginative fortunes, along with wooden, brick and metal artworks.

3.1.2. Punakha Suspension Bridge

Cross the surging Pho Chhu stream through the Punakha Suspension Bridge, a long bridge that offers picturesque perspectives of the Punakha Valley and mighty mountains. Extending more than 300 meters high over the fast waterway, the extension takes just about 10 minutes to cross. Appreciate the beautiful vistas and take some memorable photographs of the pristine waters and valley underneath.

3.1.3. Chimi Lhakhang

See the numerous phallic statues at Chimi L'hakhang Temple, a place of worship. Finding itself on a round hillock in the midst of rice paddies and a mustard handle, the sanctuary contains a 25-meter tall wood and ivory lingam. Made in 1499 by Drukpa Kunley - the purported "saint of 5,000 ladies" who introduced Bhutan to Buddhism, the sanctuary picked up the reputation for its fertility wish awards to childless couples. The neighboring villagers still practice this custom.

3.1.4. Sangchhen Dorji Lhuendrup Nunnery

Situated in a grand area on a mountain edge, Sangchhen Dorji Lhuendrup convent boasts of customary design, including a brilliant tipped, vast white stupa. Search for the 4.2-meter bronze statue of Avalokiteshvara and portrayals of eminent lamas from the Drukpa Kagyu heredity.

3.1.5. Wangdue Phodrang

This is a significant door to the far-flung regions of Eastern Bhutan. The Dzong roosted on the edge ignores the Puna Tsang Chhu (waterway) and Dang Chhu. Viewed as the town's most conspicuous element, it proffers an astounding view over both, North-South and East-West streets.

3.1.6. Khamsum Yulley Namgyal Temple

Without a doubt a standout amongst the most expound sanctuaries in Bhutan, it was commissioned by the Queen Mother of the fifth King. The religious community remains on a little slope called Ngezergang, a short separation from town. The unpredictable iconography in this sanctuary is an irregularity. The sanctuary is worked by the Holy Scriptures of the Nyingmapa Buddhists instead of techniques in designing manuals. Here, you can see the finest examples of profound art painted on the internal dividers and artistic creations of Buddhist instructors and tutelary gods of the nation.

3.1.7. Limbukha Village

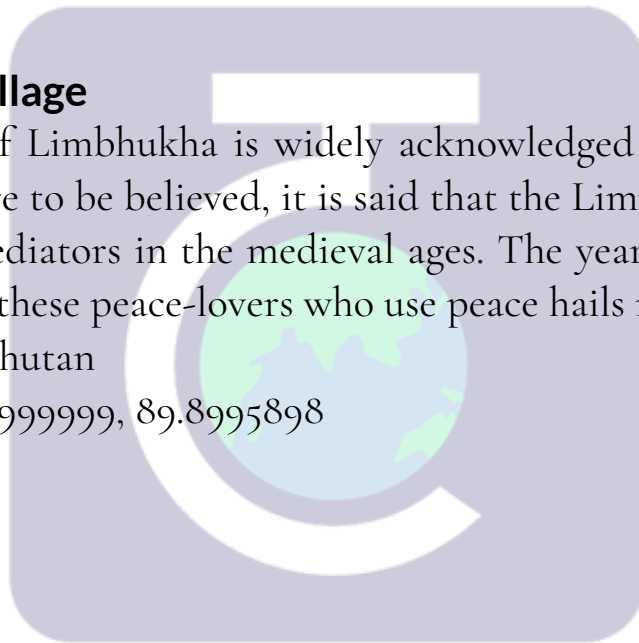

The nearby village of Limbhukha is widely acknowledged for its calmness and serenity. If legends are to be believed, it is said that the Limpus (occupants of the town) were peace mediators in the medieval ages. The yearly celebration, called Serda, is a tribute to these peace-lovers who use peace hails rather than swords.
